

Chinese and International Conference on the Use of Renewable Energy Sources in Urban Areas Architecture

➤ Background:

Environmental approach and energy resource are becoming the key issues faced by the whole world. Energy is the basic element that ensures modern human civilization, economic and social development. Global energy consumption will continue to grow due to general economic growth and social evolution. Human activities associated with rapid economic growth, increased population density, unsustainable economic developments, as well as large scale consumption of fossil fuel, however, have caused a series of global pollution problems threatening human society' s development. Therefore, to enhance the renewable energy development will be an indispensable universal trend in a long-term period. For the purpose of sharing information on policy schemes, finance mechanisms, and technology achievements concerning renewable energy development in urban area, promoting international cooperation on this area, and accelerating integration of global renewable energy and architecture, International Union of Architects (UIA) and Architectural Society of China (ASC) will host the "Chinese and International Conference on the Use of Renewable Energy Sources in Urban Areas Architecture (CIREC)" in Shenzhen during May 15-16, 2008.
